From first tooth to first steps

Being a new parent can be isolating – but there's no need to be lonely. Getting out and about with your baby and meeting others builds a strong support network which can last through and beyond your baby's pre-school years.

Join online communities like the one at www.familylives.org.uk for advice and support on any parenting or family subject, or register with www.netmums.com for information on activities and events for families in your area. Your health visitor or local health centre should have a list of local new parent and baby groups (there are often groups for mums, dads and grandparents available) – a great way to make new friends.

Here for you

Don't forget, at this and every stage of your child's development, Family Lives is here for you whatever your problem, big or small. Contact us now and see how we can help. Our support is free, confidential and for all the family. For help, call us, email us or go to www.familylives.org.uk.

We're the UK's leading charity providing support to parents and families. We can give you the support you need, on any issue, when you want it – and in a way to suit you.

Family Lives helpline –

0808 800 2222

Call the Family Lives helpline for free* and speak to someone who knows just what you're going through – because they're a parent too.

It helps to share your problems or concerns and get a new perspective on things.

You can discuss ways of dealing with issues and start enjoying family life again.

Remember, you are one call away from taking the pressure off.
